Postmodernity, a Trinity of Crises

Putmodernity is in condition to act a fect on all, not particularly in the West, or the ‘developed world’, nor in the national population, nor in the economic sphere, nor in the social sphere, nor in the political sphere, nor in the cultural sphere, nor in the educational sphere, nor in the technological sphere, nor in the environmental sphere, nor in the global sphere, nor in the interational sphere. Yet, there are some indices that suggest that this is happening, or is about to happen.

Part of the crisis: Postmodernity & its Discontents

The postmodernist critique of modernity is multifaceted. It challenges the notion of progress, emphasizing the importance of diversity and plurality over unity and uniformity. Postmodernism also critiques the idea of grand narratives and universal truths, advocating for the recognition of multiple perspectives and truths.
