Enhancing assessment using equitable practice

Dr Emily Salines, Catherine Caldwell, Siobhan Clay

 AdvanceHE Putting the student at the heart of assessment and feedback:
Equality, diversity and feedback

- How can focusing on students' journey through assessment highlight sites of inequity?
- How can assessment design contribute to social justice?
- How can assessment practice (marking, grading and feedback approaches) be interrogated and made more equitable?

Why we started

- Awarding differentials
- Art, design and media
- Focus on social justice
- UUK report 2018

Why we thought assessment was important

- Lots of varied assessment practice evident across the institution
- A research and pedagogic approach
- New student-centred assessment criteria introduced in 2019

Jan McArthur on assessment for social justice

“If assessment shapes how and what students learn, as the literature suggests, and if we are committed to social justice within and through higher education, then surely assessment is key to the achievement of that social justice”

Jan McArthur, 2021.

Student-centered design

- Design assessment so that it supports attainment
- Focus on formative assessment
- Support students as they develop self-assessment skills

Students' identities in arts and design

- “Creative arts students’ identities are profoundly intrinsic to their practice. My research sought to explore the interplay between what students bring of themselves and the environment they find at UAL.
- Once at UAL, students’ frequent and meaningful conversations with tutors about their work are crucial to sustaining their creative and intellectual growth.”

Four examples of practice

1. How does assessment mapping help equity?

"Since the pandemic it has been really different for the technicians. It has been crash course in being immersed in the assessment work"

- Specialist technical coordinator

2. Sharing practice of the affective nature of feedback

"I learned so much. Thinking about the emotional turbulence that students go through"

-Erica Weide

Course Leader teamed with Academic support. Listened to students' perceptions of their feedback

Emb &Print: The Emotions Wall

Things I feel when I get my feedback

Me when I submit my work pending for the feedback

Me beforehand

20h

Me when I'm about to open the assessment feedback link on my phone and it says unavailable me after looking at my grades getting ready to read feedback

Me questioning if I should drop out after one negative feedback assessment

I'm too scared to look back at my feedback because too much was wrong lol

Me when I get my feedback and read it because it's not what I expected

Me overthinking and wondering what I could've done better after getting my feedback cos I tried my hardest

reading my assesemnt fedback

Me treating myself cos I didn't get what I wanted for my feedback #retailtherapy

Me determined to try harder and not give up after one of my first major units when i get good or back feedback - me when I tried really hard but most of my feedback is negative

I did nothing well

Me ignoring the positive feedback and reading the negative part in my assessment feedback

3. Marking, grading and feedback

For the first time students said
'Oh, we understood the feedback'

... they didn't come and say 'I don't understand why I got this'.

They just said

'Yeah, can I try and do better?

Can I submit again?'

interventions

4. Responding to students' need for authentic assessment

Thomas Giagkoglou, Course Leader.

- Not everyone wants to write 10,000 words.
Some people might want to use their final major project as a calling card... for employment after they graduate, and it adds to their portfolio
- More and more students are opting for the practice-based dissertation. It allows the students to not only to build on their previous creative skills, but also to explore academic topics in a creative way
