Andrea Mason is a London-based artist and writer who has published short stories in a number of art and literary journals and publications. She has undertaken a number of public art commissions including Art U Need (2007) and Making Play, (2008), South London Gallery.

She is currently completing her Creative Writing PhD at Goldsmiths, University of London, which consists of a novel, The Cremation Project, and an enquiry into the intersection of art and writing practice, and specifically the influence of Fluxus.

She writes: "TOUCHES relates to artist Mierle Ladesman Ukeles's piece, Touch Sanitation, 1978-1984, in which she shook hands with 8,500 sanitation workers at Fresh Kills, New York."
