

Craft Rally

A network for makers

Craft Rally is an inclusive, dynamic and inspirational event for makers to exchange information. It is designed by makers, for makers and with makers.

Join us for a programme of talks, seminars, screenings, discussions, performances, networking and socialising.

Participate, investigate and celebrate the breadth of approaches within contemporary craft at this inaugural Craft Rally!

Where are we? ...

Where are we going from here?

How has the meaning of craft changed and developed through time?
How can our current landscape offer new and exciting ways of thinking and making today?

Do you want to ...

... exchange ideas and experiences with craft makers from around the country?

... explore and articulate ways of thinking and working that are inspirational and engaging, challenging and involving, participatory and revelatory, unexpected and surprising?

... be challenged and inspired to develop your own thinking and practice?

... reflect, assess or embrace your future practice?

... create your space for collaborative thinking, making and action?

If so, come and bring your voice to the Craft Rally.

The Programme

Part 1: London

Thursday 25 March 2010

Chelsea College of Art & Design, 45 Millbank

10am – 5pm, evening event 5 – 7pm

Contemporary craft practice is an exciting and vibrant field. Its methodologies generate modern and timely responses to current social debates and it offers new and exciting ways to consider life and global issues that we face. Craft and making has an impact on society today, but can our voice and practice be at the very heart of current debate?

Through exchange of knowledge and approaches to making, can we develop a meaningful place for craft as part of our shared future?

This is a day to take up materials, tools, thoughts, words and action! Move between rooms and spaces throughout the historic Chelsea campus to explore an interactive programme of workshops, happenings, discussions and networking, promoted by groups of makers, curators, speakers and protagonists. What does craft's relationship to sustainability, resourcefulness, activism or community mean to your practice? How could collaboration with other craft-makers and disciplines generate new and exciting ways of looking at your own approach? Out of these sessions will emerge manifestos, presentations, ideas or objects to fuel further action. And of course it's a chance to share the experience and sheer unadulterated joy of making things!

We invite you to bring and share your own crafted edible contributions with a prize for the best cake! Over tea, commit your thoughts to the tablecloths for 'Cloth Non-Confidential' – a space for your customisation, comments and ideas to feed into Craft Rally Online and future Craft Rally events.

Finally, end the day feeling energised with music from David Littler and the 'Sampler - Culture Clash' project which brings together the seemingly disparate worlds of DJ sampling and embroidery.

So come and share ideas on 'Where do we go from here?' in a day of workshops and discussions.

Part 2: Sheffield

Friday 23 April 2010

Museums Sheffield: Millennium Galleries, Learning Centre

1.30pm - 5.00 pm

In April the Craft Rally debate moves to the Millennium Galleries, Sheffield.

Recent years have seen the diminishing of many traditional craft skills from contemporary society. Yet, current debates centring around climate change and sustainability are forcing us to think again about the usefulness of a skilled local workforce, using the resources and materials available close by to produce goods for our communities.

This day offers the opportunity to network whilst exploring current issues around sustainability in crafts practice with Adam Sutherland,

Director of Grizedale Arts; Rebecca Earley, textile designer and Senior Research Fellow at Chelsea College of Art and Design, University of the Arts London and Neil Brownsword, ceramicist and winner of the 'One-Off' prize at the British Ceramic Biennial 2009.
