In a world where mass-production is the norm, how do you give 'soul' to an object? Taking the time to craft something by hand, working meticulously, intuitively, tenderly, is perhaps a response to the modern grind. How busy we are today! We diligently pursue what we have been told to want: more of everything. In contemporary culture's seemingly unparalleled and all-enveloping busyness, breaking the paradigm is hard to do. And yet, those who do are growing in numbers.

Alice Lemoine is one of those norm-breakers. An autodidact knitter, she lets her instinct guide her. Taking a leaf out of the Surrealists' handbook, she adroitly practices 'automatic knitting' – playfully tapping into her own creative subconscious to let shapes and patterns grow forth of their own accord. And so her garments become protective layers, against the elements and the tiny disjunctures of daily life.

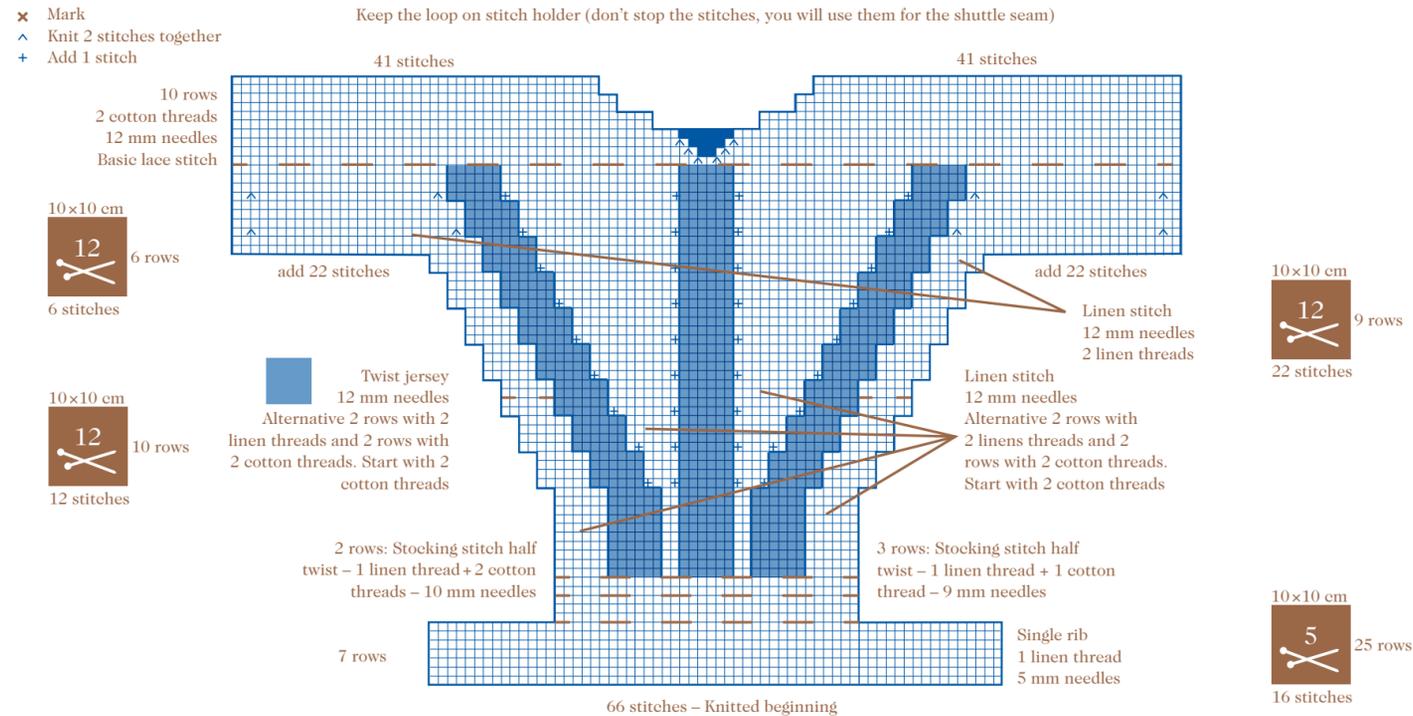

This pattern is a gift from Alice to you. Knit it, add your own idiosyncrasies and allow your mind to wander.
